

Pukach arrest one of year's breakthroughs

→ 2 and Oleksander Popovych – are serving prison sentences for the Gongadze murder. Their boss, Pukach, was arrested in July. His boss, ex-Interior Minister Yuriy Kravchenko, died from two gunshot wounds to the head the day he was scheduled to give testimony in the investigation.

Prosecutors say Pukach is now cooperating with investigators, who have reported the recent discovery of fragments of Gongadze's skull, teeth and a pair of rubber yellow gloves worn by someone who touched the journalist's remains.

Several of the country's leading investigative journalists told the Kyiv Post that they do not plan to attend the Independence Square commemoration this year. Gongadze's mother, Lesya Gongadze, on Sept. 6 expressed disgust with those who have used her son's murder for personal and political gain.

President Victor Yushchenko appeared as a case in point the next day.

"There are people in the entourage of the prime minister [Yulia Tymoshenko] who are not interested in seeing the [Gongadze] inquiry make progress because they worked under former president Kuchma, who was in power when [Gongadze's] murder took place," Yushchenko was quoted as telling the German magazine Der Spiegel.

A week earlier, the pro-Yushchenko Ukraina Moloda newspaper quoted the president as saying the outcome of the Gongadze investigation would influence the presidential poll. "This much is obvious," Yushchenko said. "[It] will be one of the most impressive illustrations of democracy ever."

One man who did more than anyone else to ignite furor over the Gongadze murder now wants to be president. Melnychenko, Kuchma's former security guard, released the 2000 recordings that purported to implicate Kuchma in the crime. Melnychenko's flashy new website (<http://melnychenko.com.ua>) advertises his crusade to hold Kuchma and Kuchma's chief of staff, Verkhovna Rada Speaker Volodymyr Lytvyn, accountable for Gongadze's disappearance.

After years of talking about the tapes, Melnychenko now says he is "not allowed to discuss the recordings I provided" to the General Prosecutor's Office. He said he might attend the Sept. 16 candle-lighting ceremony if it doesn't conflict with his campaign schedule.

Yatseniuk takes color-coded vision to town hall meeting

→ 2 pre-presidential election campaign – the creation of the All-Ukraine Front for Change non-governmental organization (with 600 offices throughout Ukraine, including 10 in Kyiv) - Yatseniuk delivered a 35-minute stump speech. His talk covered the four key themes advertised by his color-coded pre-election campaign billboard campaign: re-industrialization, re-cultivation, re-education and re-equipping the military.

Re-industrialization (orange)
Yatseniuk said his first task as Ukraine's new president would be to put people to work.

"The era of Ukraine as a post-industrial nation which earns money without producing anything is over. It ended with the start of the world economic crisis last year," he said. "If Ukraine does not build new factories which can produce goods which are competitive on world markets, we do not have a future."

Yatseniuk remarked that Ukraine has completed only three large-scale construction projects over the past 18 years: the construction of two atomic power plants in Rivne and Khmelnytskyi oblasts and a highway from Kyiv to Odesa.

"I know, because we paid for the projects when I was acting head of the National Bank of Ukraine," he said.

Re-cultivation (green)
Ukraine needs to develop large-scale industrial farming to meet its domestic food needs. Yatseniuk said only 60 percent of what Ukrainians consume is produced in Ukraine. He said large-scale agricultural projects would help restore the vitality of the rural population and improve the country's demographics.

Arseniy Yatseniuk

Re-education (blue)
Ukraine needs healthy and educated citizens, said Yatseniuk, who cited United Nations predictions that the country's population would decrease by 10 million people by the year 2050.

"We are getting old and dying out. We need a country where people want and are able to work, where the government supports individuals who think well and are making sound decisions."

→ Young Yatseniuk hopes to shake up political order run by three politicians

Re-equipping the military (red)
The country's armed forces should at least be capable of defending the country's territorial integrity, according to Yatseniuk, who said efficient reform of the military-industrial sector could lead to increased sales on the global arms market and contribute to economic growth.

Yatseniuk said additional priority matters are the formulation of a comprehensive national policy on the use of Ukrainian territory as a transportation corridor for commodities exchanged between Europe and the Russian Federation and creation of a free trade zone with the European Union.
